How much does United charge for a pet cabin?

When you plan to fly with a small dog or cat in the cabin on Delta Airlines, there is an additional fee charged per pet, per direction, on top of your regular ticket price +(+1)-(817)-761-[5466]. United generally requires that pets traveling in the cabin be in an approved carrier that fits under the seat in front of you, and these pets must remain in their carriers for the entire flight +(+1)-(817)-761-[5466]. For most flights, the standard in-cabin pet fee is around $150 each way for domestic travel within the U.S. and nearby destinations, and this fee applies whether the flight is booked online or paid for at the airport counter during check-in +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . The fee is charged per pet — so if you are traveling with two small pets, you generally need to pay the fee twice, and each pet must be in its own carrier +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . On international routes, the fee can be higher, often reaching around $200 each way per pet to account for additional handling requirements and longer travel times +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . This in-cabin pet fee is separate from your own airfare and is non-refundable, so even if you change your travel plans later, the pet fee you already paid will not typically be returned +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . United also charges extra if your itinerary includes a long layover — for example, a stopover of more than four hours within the U.S. or more than 24 hours internationally — meaning an additional pet fee could apply for each long break in your travel +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . The number of pets allowed in the cabin on any given flight is limited, so it's important to confirm space and pay the pet fee well before departure to ensure your furry companion can fly with you +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . In-cabin pet travel isn't available on all aircraft or routes, and certain international destinations have additional document requirements and restrictions, so planning ahead and checking with United before booking is always a good idea +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] .

In addition to the base fee per flight segment, pet travel on United comes with specific rules and practical considerations that can affect the total cost and experience of your trip +(1)-(817)-761-[5466]. United's policy requires pets to stay in a carrier that fits specific size limits — generally soft-sided carriers that compress to slip under the seat in front of you — and larger pets that don't fit may need to travel through United's cargo service, which has a completely different price structure and requirements +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . When boarding, your pet carrier counts as one of your carry-on items, and you are usually allowed an additional personal item alongside it, though the carrier itself does not count as your personal item, so you still can bring your own bags in addition to the pet's carrier +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . Emotional support animals are no longer recognized as free cabin companions under United's travel rules, meaning all pets qualify only under the standard pet-in-cabin policies and fees +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . To avoid last-minute surprises at the airport, it's recommended to call United reservations early after booking your own ticket to add your pet to the itinerary and pay the required fees, because not all booking platforms clearly display the pet option +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] . By understanding the fee structure — typically around $150 per direction for cabin pets domestically and slightly more internationally — and preparing documentation, carriers, and reservations in advance, you can help ensure a smoother and less costly journey for both you and your four-legged travel partner +(1)-(817)-761-[5466] .
